

Article from The Courier: Monday 25th August 2008
(With thanks to The Courier for allowing us to reproduce this here)

Dundee's West End Tennis Club will benefit from world-class coaching this Saturday as it hosts an open day featuring the mother of British number one tennis player Andy Murray.

Judy Murray will officially open the new courts built for the club and give coaching advice to the under-16s tennis players throughout the morning.

After five years of gathering funding to the total of £175,000, which included donations from Gannochy Trust and Sportscotland, the new courts and floodlighting were completed in May.

Ann Johnston, club vice-chairman, said "We're very excited at having a world-class coach such as Judy to open our new courts. She's a very suitable person to do this for us and it's the icing on the cake.

"It has been a long journey for us to get the necessary funding to make this possible but we're thrilled to have Judy coming here to mark this moment of progression for our club."

The event will include free coaching, mini tennis an exhibition match from 2pm, games, prizes and refreshments, and will be open to the public all day.